

One dies on National Public Radio, flatly.

They say your poems or spin your tunes, praise
acting, or whatever

art, barely itemizing that you've swandived

from a ledge or truly dashed drunk at infernal traffic.

(At any rate, a something terribly past middle class limits.)